Excerpt: . old man; but the glory of his kingdom and his honor and brightness remained with him to the last. But he lived to see the great canal completed, and to witness the marriage of his favorite daughter, Nitocris (whose Egyptian name had been given to her by himself), to his chief general (also of royal stock), Neriglissar. And so, in the seventy-ninth year of his age, this wonderful man expired at Babylon, after an illness of but short duration. Emphatically may it be said of him, his works do follow him; for, at this late day of the world's history, 2,450 years after his death, the disinterred records on the imperishable bricks of ancient Babylon, furnish surer and more numerous records of his life than we possess of any other man so far back in the world's history, among which...
