Kirkus Indie Book of the Month: An honest, searching exploration of the artist as a young man. . . . part travelogue, part coming out story, 88x50 is an unsentimental and at times harrowing self-portrait of an artist in the act of self-becoming. Tandler uses the book as an opportunity to rethink the very nature of memoir with web links to photographs, performance clips and journal entries that draw the reader even deeper into the experience of the America 88x50 tour. --Kevin Brannon, Lambda Literary . . . a harrowing, moving, glowing book. . . 88x50 is one of the finest memoirs by any performing artist, and a powerful testament to the great American project of self-invention and mastery. Nothing less than the failure of a life-long dream is at stake. It is impossible not to be moved by the intensity and honesty of this authors voice as he practices his way to self-revelation. - Cassandra Garbus, author of Solo Variations Tandler is bold both as an author and narrative presence, his mission refreshing and brave in its honesty, and his love for what he saves his greatest passion is heartbreakingly familiar if you are a great artist. In these pages he is baldly and nakedly tender, exposing our own need to express ourselves while combining aesthetic emotion with humor (the mark of a true genius)....
