Brand New Book  Print on Demand .An excerpt from the beginning of: The Passing of the Great Queen. WAR and rumours of war, nation rising against nation, these fulfilled and yet threatening disasters have culminated in the worst disaster of all, the 'passing' of the greatest, purest, best, and most blameless Monarch in our history. England's Queen is dead! The words sound as heavily as though one should say, 'The sun is no longer in the sky!' Strange indeed is it to think of England without the Mother-Queen of the great British people; to realize that she, the gentle and beneficent Lady of the Land, has left us forever! We had grown to think of her as almost immortal. Her goodness, her sympathy, were so much part of ourselves, and were so deeply entwined in the very heart and life and soul of the nation, that we have seldom allowed ourselves to think of the possibility of her being taken from us. Always apparently 'well,' never permitting her subjects to think there was anything the matter with her, bearing bravely such trials and bereavements as would have broken down the health and nerve of many a stronger and younger woman, she was always as it seemed, ready to our call. We, spoilt children of long favouring fortune, had grown accustomed to believe she would always be thus 'ready,' that our constant prayer and chant which all we in our generation have sung since we were children 'God Save the Queen!' would be so potent and persuasive as to altogether disarm the one invincible Angel who, when the hour of his solemn visitation comes, will take no denial, but 'Beckons, and...
